F. C. Sweet of Brookton arrived hare on Thursday evening and is considered an important witness. To go to Brockton to see him and secure some bonds was the pretext which it is claimed that Moulton used to get $500 from George W. Carroll. It is claimed that Moulton did not go to Brockton and also that Mr. Sweet did not have the bonds which Moulton represented he was going to get and that they had been disposed of.

The case promises to be decidedly interesting, as the accused has at previous hearings shown a desire to enterinto the trial personally, having addressed the court and spoken in his own behalf several times.

one of the examiners notes that "by far the greatest mass of good compositions were written by children from ten to twelve years old.

Perhaps it is because very little boys and girls are usually direct, straightforward and unaffected in their research."

We agree with The Times that "this we agree with the inhea that this is a matter to which the school principals might well give attention." Something is wrong in the public teaching of English composition if in four years it turns the writers of original and forcefully phrased little essays into pompous but bungling rhetoricians, poor copylsts of the style of others or mere "smart Alecks" of the pen. Business men who hire young clerks complain bitterly of this appar-ent deadening of the faculties of observation, common sense and clear ex-

Progressive Congregationalism.

The New England Congregational congress at Manchester, N. H., this week, must have been a warm affair. Judge Colt of New London spoke of Congregationalism as democracy run mad. "We keep harping on local autonomy, "God's sake let us forget it. We must bring the local churches more together into one body, and if this congress does nothing more than start such a movement it will have this congress does nothing more than start such a movement it will have been a notable congress." Other speakers seemed to feel the same way. Dr. A. Z. Conrad deplored the conduct of ministers who stav away from association. Secretary Fred B. Smith of the International Y. M. C. A. uttered words of caution, "A failure at hallooning," he said, "at baseball, at driving trotting horses, or any other ballooning" he said, "at baseball at driving trotting horses, or any other liky occupation, may become an evanfelist and be accepted in our churches, where he drawa crowds. The church should have her own evangelists trained men who make evangelism their work." Rev. Mr. Blake argued that every local conference of Congre-gational churches should have an ad-visory committee. The Bautist women gave the congress a turken dinner and a chicken pie supper; the Unitarian women gave them another and "ex-cellent" supper. This last entertain-ment shows how mightily progressive the Congregationalists are getting.— Holyoke Transcript.
